

Forum Focuses on Performance Excellence

More than 40 state, city and county employees participated in a Baldrige Forum sponsored by the Naifeh Center for Effective Leadership and the Tennessee Center for Performance Excellence (TNCPE). The forum, held in Oak Ridge, discussed how Excellent Performance Maximizes Taxpayer Investment.

Patrick Lawton, city administrator in Germantown, speaks to Session II participants.

Katie Rawls, president and chief executive officer for TNCPE, opened the forum by presenting an overview of the Baldrige process and quality awards. During the first session, Patricia Weiland, chief executive officer for the Tennessee Rehabilitative Initiative in Correction

CIS Course Trains Students to Handle Unexploded Weapons

It was a scene that easily could have caused concern to the unsuspecting passerby: Men in white hazmat suits and respirator masks Thursday tending to what appeared to be some sort of dangerous chemical spill outside the University of Tennessee building on Middlebrook Pike.

Fortunately, the scene was part of an exercise during the first week of an unexploded ordnance training course being offered by the university for the first time.

The UT Center for Industrial Services (CIS) is partnering with Maryville-based company Relyant, whose contractors help dispose of dangerous materials across the globe, to teach the seven-week, non-credit course that will prepare students to clear domestic military bases and test sites, as well as battle-torn regions worldwide.

Students will leave the course as Level I technicians — qualified to handle and dispose of unexploded weapons as well as other related tasks such as hazardous waste clean-up.

There are seven students enrolled in the 40-hour-per-week course. Nearly all have a military background.

CTAS, Associations Gather in Nashville for Annual County Government Day

The County Officials Association of Tennessee (COAT) and the Tennessee County Services Association (TCSA) held their annual COAT/TCSA County Government Day conference April 10-11 in Nashville. This conference included board meetings and full membership meetings for all county associations and their affiliates. UT County Technical Assistance Service (CTAS) staff was on hand to answer questions from county and state officials.

This annual meeting provides CTAS employees an opportunity to discuss issues of legislative importance that could have an impact on county government. This year's conference was topped off by a general session and breakfast honoring the members of the 107th General Assembly. Tennessee's constitutional officers were on hand to hear Speaker of the House Beth Harwell, Lieutenant Governor Ron Ramsey and Governor Bill Haslam address the group of more than 400 county officials and guests. ■

(TRICOR), discussed her department's participation in the Baldrige program and how important it is to involve all of the people in an organization in the process. David Hart and Rip Young, also from TRICOR, talked about the entire process and how it helped to improve the performance of their organization.

Patrick Lawton, city administrator in Germantown, led session two and told attendees about the broad improvements in a thriving municipality. He discussed his city and how going through Baldrige has led to improved processes in Germantown. The third session was conducted by Jim Ford with the Quality Adult Education Initiative for TNCPE.

"We were very pleased with the strong turnout," said Tom Kohntopp, program manager for the Naifeh Center. "All of the presenters have experienced Baldrige and are able to share with attendees how it has led to more streamlined and improved processes in their organizations." ■

Chad Reep of Claxton served in the Marine Corps five years until he was honorably discharged in September.

Unhappy hanging house gutters upon his arrival home stateside, Reep learned of the unexploded ordinance course at a veteran's job fair and signed up that day.

"I loved the military so I figured getting into this field would give me an opportunity to still travel and maybe even work with the military again," said Reep.

There are only two other similar, university-affiliated programs in the U.S. — Texas A&M University and Colorado State University.

UT and Relyant wanted to make their program the most comprehensive in giving students all the necessary training and certification to prepare them for the job market, according to Tammi Croteau, a course director from Relyant who also has a background in explosive ordinance disposal through the Washington National Guard.

"That was our plan with all the certifications that we include," said Croteau. "These guys are going to come out as the complete package — ready to go on day one — and in today's economy they need every competitive advantage they can get."

Upon course completion, students will have their HAZWOPER certification, or Heavy Machinery Certification, and International Mine Action Standards, which allows graduates to work in de-mining efforts in areas like Afghanistan, where Relyant deploys many of its contractors. ■

Ely, Moon Present at Continuing Education Symposium

Naifeh Center for Effective Leadership Training Specialist Macel Ely and UT County Technical Assistance Service (CTAS) e-Learning Specialist Mary Ann Moon recently spoke at the International Association for Continuing Education and Training (IACET) Symposium held in Atlanta. The symposium highlighted some of the "best practices" of continuing education across the country. Other presenters included the Georgia Department of Labor, ESI University, and Emory Healthcare.

Macel Ely

Mary Ann Moon

Last year the UT Institute for Public Service (IPS) was granted an additional five years as an Authorized Provider for IACET accreditation. IACET is a top-quality entity that strives to "promote and enhance quality in continuing education and training (CE/T) through research, education and the development and continuous improvement of criteria, principles and standards." The organization was the first to develop the original Continuing Education Unit (CEU) along with the creation of the ANSI/IACET Standard for Continuing Education and Training.

During their session, Ely and Moon shared stories and insight on going through the accreditation process for IPS. They concluded by showing the audience the recently developed IPS CEU Approver's Sharepoint Site that IT Administrator Scott Gordy helped to create. The site has streamlined the process by which all IPS agencies submit courses for CEU approval; and as a result, the new method of approving courses has enhanced the level of effectiveness and efficiency for training departments. The session was well received by those in the audience.

For those not aware, each IPS agency has individuals on the overall IPS CEU Approval Committee. Once a course has been submitted for CEU, it must then be approved by three committee members and then receives a fourth approval by the overall IPS CEU Administrator. Below are the individuals who work diligently to ensure that courses meet the IACET standard and provide IPS agencies with a competitive edge over others in the area of adult learning.

MTAS Staff, City Leaders Peak Interest in Benchmarking at Municipal Managers Conference

UT Municipal Technical Advisory Service (MTAS) staff who facilitate the Tennessee Municipal Benchmarking Project (TMBP), headed to Nashville on April 11-12 to promote performance management at the Spring Conference of the Tennessee City Managers Association.

Frances Adams-O'Brien and Sarah Young joined John Crawford to present on the TMBP, a comparative performance management project coordinated by MTAS for a decade. The project currently boasts 10 participating cities across the state of Tennessee. MTAS staff is focused on making fiscal year 2012 the biggest year yet for the project with plans to add even more cities.

MTAS staff briefed the audience on essentials of benchmarking, a timeline for the fiscal year 2012 project cycle and sample measures calculated in its annual report. Then they spotlighted the expertise of city leaders who have participated in the TMBP for the past 10 years with a panel discussion about the positive impact of the project in their localities.

Frances Adams-O'Brien

Cleveland City Manager Janice Casteel, Brentwood Assistant City Manager Kirk Bednar and Collierville Assistant to the City Manager Janet Geyer comprised the panel. Casteel celebrated the improved collaboration that occurred among city staff in the process of the project's data cleansing exercises, while Geyer emphasized how data generated by the project can aid in public relations. Bednar stressed the critical need for direction from the city manager to insure buy-in among the staff in collecting the data, given the big commitment of work time and effort it entails. Panelists cited numerous examples of the positive impact of benchmarking including improved fire response times and verification of productivity levels in residential refuse collection.

The presentation generated a buzz among conference attendees and several cities expressed interest in joining the project as a result. "Performance measurement should ultimately be a tool for performance management," Adams-O'Brien relayed in the presentation. City leaders who have participated in this project confirm the powerful impact it has made in improving and monitoring their own city service delivery. ■ program. Members of the committee included: Alan Jones, Metro Knoxville Airport Authority; Celeste Taylor, city of Martin; Connie Etzkin, city of Columbia; Janet Curry, city of Farragut; George Dalton, The Pool; Gary Petree, MTAS; Terri Kinloch, UT County Technical Assistance Service (CTAS); and Trish Pulley and Lisa Spencer, Tennessee Department of Human Resources.

Stokes, along with Bonnie Jones and Josh Jones from MTAS, also recently completed the new Tennessee-sponsored HR certificate program. The certificate training is a competency-based training initiative that involves the Role of Human Resources in Public Sector, Legal Issues in Human Resources and Human Resources Administration. ■

A few weeks ago, I was referred to your office by an assistant at Bob Corker's office. I had asked for help in navigating the federal purchase order system as well as needing help with a Navy testing lab's logjam. I first met Debbie Barber and met Joe Flynn a few days later. Their help has been invaluable. We are still working very closely with them and will continue to as we attempt to sell our products. I appreciate the assistance we have received and continue to receive. I'll be happy to share progress as we experience it.
